Adam was practising penalties at the football pitch behind the house when a strange crackling sound came from behind him.

Crackle. Pop. Hissss.

He turned around.

There, hovering just above the ground, was a small flame-creature with big round eyes.

"Oh no, oh no, oh no," the creature was saying. "Not again."

The grass around him was scorched black. And there, right in the middle of it, lay his favorite football, singed at the edges.

"I'm Blaze," said the creature, drooping. "Keeper of Fire. My job is to keep the fire warm and bright. But today it went red."

"Red?" asked Adam.

"When something goes wrong, I get HOT. And then my flame goes red and spiky, and I can't stop it, and then—" He looked at the scorched grass. "Then I burn the things I love."

Adam looked at Blaze's flame. It was red. It was jagged. And it was shaking, just a little.

Adam knew that feeling.

When Adam's brother Omar touched his cards, Adam would shout 'That's not fair!' and stomp off to his room.

"It just happens," said Adam. "Really fast."

"Exactly!" said Blaze. "Really fast. Like a match. And nobody told me what to do about it."

Just then, Omar came running over. "What's that smell? Is something burning?"

"Maybe," said Adam slowly, "we have to find out together."

Blaze's eyes went wide. "You'd help me? Even after I burned his favorite football?"

"Especially after," said Adam.

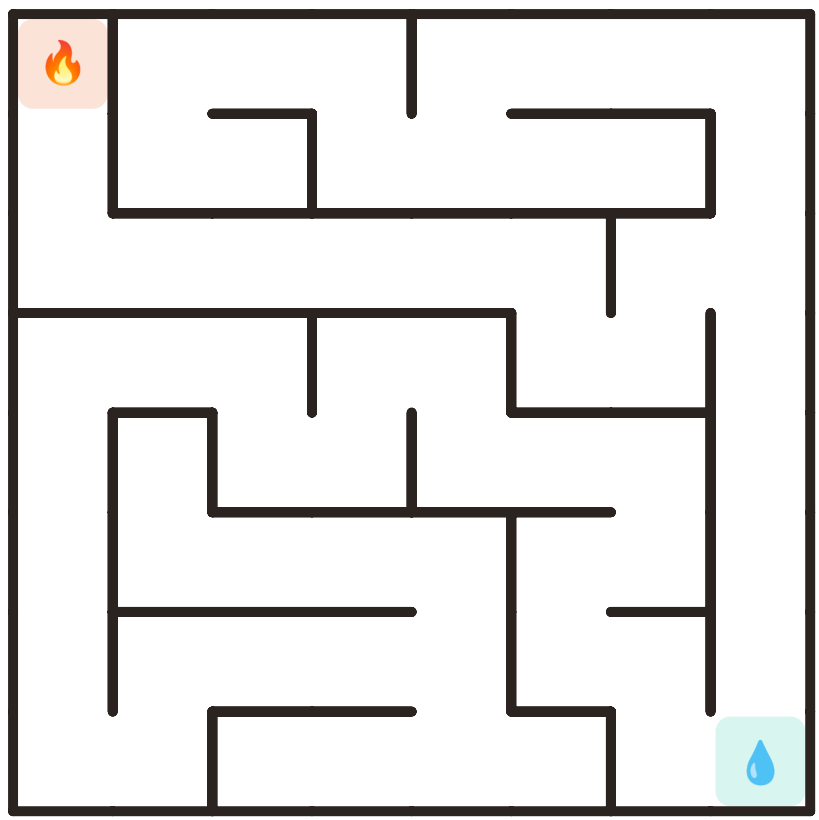

Blaze pointed across the football pitch behind the house. "There's a place — the Cool Pond. The old Keepers used to go there when their fire got too big. But the way is tricky, and when I'm red I can't think straight."

"Then I'll think for both of us," said Adam.

"One rule," said Blaze. "At every turn, we stop and take one slow breath. Fire hates slow breaths."

Blaze's maze

Help Blaze find the way. At every turn, take one slow breath.

At the Cool Pond, Blaze floated down to the water's edge.

Breathe in. Breathe out. In. Out.

His flame flickered. The red softened to orange. The orange faded to gold. And then, very slowly, it turned a calm, steady blue.

"It's still fire," Blaze whispered, looking at his reflection. "I thought the only way to stop being red was to stop being fire. But it's just... my fire now. I'm holding it."

Adam grinned.

"Blue Blaze," he said. "I like it."

They walked back together. The grass was still a bit black, and his favorite football was still a bit singed. But Blaze didn't droop this time.

"Next time I feel the hot thing," said Blaze, "I'm going to find my blue first."

Adam thought about it. About the fast feeling, and the slow breath, and the pond.

"Me too," said Adam. "Next time, I'm going to find my blue."

And that is how Adam became the Official Helper of Blaze, Keeper of Fire.

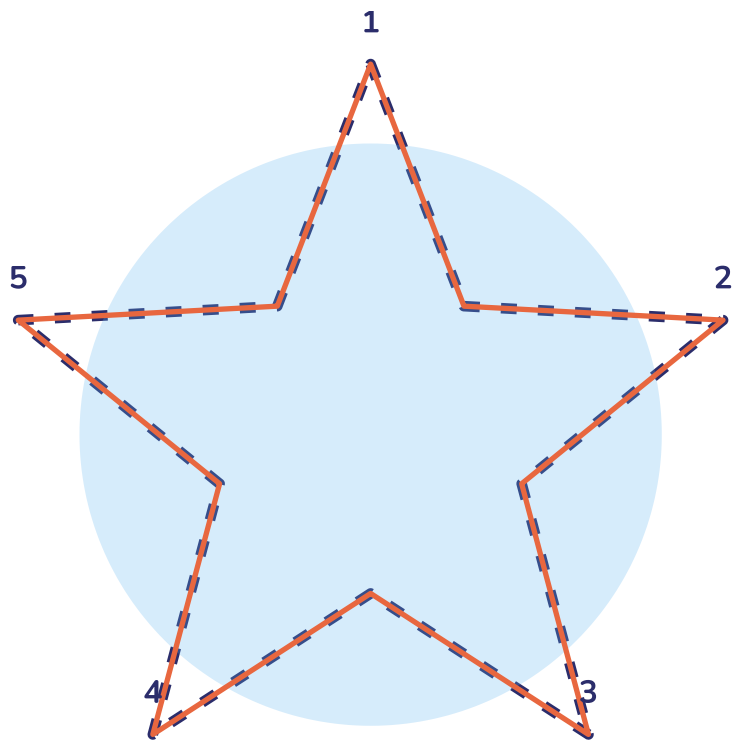

Blaze still gets hot sometimes. So does Adam.

But now they both know the way to the Cool Pond — one slow breath at a time.

The End.

How to read this with Adam

- Read it together, and let your child solve the challenge themselves.
- When Blaze changes, ask: "What helped?"
- Come back to the Workshop on another day — it doesn't have to be all at once.

Questions to talk about afterwards

1. What helps you take a slow breath when you feel a hot, fast feeling like Blaze?
2. How did Adam help Blaze feel better without telling him what to do?
3. Can you remember a time when you felt your feelings get big and red?
4. What is your favorite way to cool down when you are frustrated?

Stories where your child doesn't just hear the solution — they live it.

Blaze is one of the Keepers: nine characters, each guarding one feeling, each needing your child's help.
